

As a U.S. citizen whose access to news that matters has been horribly circumscribed, I object categorically to any further FCC changes to remove the few remaining restrictions in the way of total and complete monopoly control of information in the print and electronic media. In my opinion, privately controlled propaganda is much like government controlled propaganda. I prefer a free press--free of government control and free of private monopolies. The government's proper role is to establish fair rules. The broadcast spectrum is a limited resource and that is why the FCC was created: to make sure that limited resource would be used in the public interest.
